Editor's Message

In my last message, I encouraged the CIPHI membership to submit and share experiences to help us to celebrate our profession. You have responded with enthusiasm.

In this issue, we revisit some recent awards that were given out to extremely worthy candidates such as Ron de Burger and Dr. Eilish Cleary, and we recap some of our colleagues' action in response to the Alberta flood. Celebrating our past as well as recognizing excellent current work should become commonplace in the pages of the Environmental Health Review.

There are three scientific articles in this issue, including two evidence reviews. I received more articles this past session than any other session previously in my almost two years as Editor-in-Chief. I see this as very encouraging and would like to reiterate the need for our profession to share high quality scientific and professional information.

With that, I would like to continue to encourage the membership to share their experiences of the past and to share thoughts about the future. Please consider submitting an article to the Environmental Health Review in a case study format that explores a practice, a technical article that explores the evolution of the profession, or a commentary piece that expresses a point of view on a subject within our profession. I look forward to your response.

Andrew Papadopoulos
Editor-in-Chief